More than 33% of B2B technology buyers will rate chatbots as a Top 10 engagement channel.

As the technologies mature, chatbots and virtual assistants will leverage first- and third-party data along with AI and machine learning to offer more personalized, guided experiences.

35% of companies will double down on workplace AI.

Forrester forecasts that by the end of 2021, one out of every four remote workers in the US will be supported by new forms of automation.

Robotic process automation (RPA) bots combined with conversational intelligence and other intelligent automation will handle business tasks often invisible to the home worker.

More than 60%of B2B sellers will be enabled by AI and automation.

Sales tools that capture and automatically upload buyer and seller activity data to CRM systems will finally take sellers out of the data entry game. Sellers will have the time and space to conduct deeper customer research, cull insights from data, and orchestrate more meaningful interactions with buyers.

AI can surface patterns, guide the seller to the next best action, and identify the buyer's preferred channel.

By 2030, companies that fully absorb AI could double their cash flow
